For the woman whose work is at home the half hour preceding or fol-lowing luncheon is apt to be one that could be spent in this way. Where there are children old enough to go to school after the meal is better, for the little folks will have turned back to their lessons, no callers need be ex-pected, and the afternoon's task or engagement can usually brook this little delay. For the mothers whose babies are still in arms the "rest" should be taken while their little charges sleep. Says one mother to this: "Why, that is my only chance to 'pick up' and 'catch up' with things." Spare the half hour to rest and the picking up and catching up will be the better forwarded. The business woman whose work must be done at the office or shop must invent her chance for rest. Nothing but sin can rule a home. No misfortune, if it has not sin for an ally, is powerful enough to wreck it. There may be emptiness in the larder, the house may be in ashes, sickness may lay its hand on one and another of its members, even death may assail it, but the true home lives in glorious tri-umph over all. A part of the family may be on the other side of the mystle veil, children may be scattered over the globe, but home remains a blessed fact. visions of sorrow and coming death. All the joys and glory of his well-spent life will come to an end when mankind sits down to the table and celebrates his own joys next Thorsday. But perhaps the fattest and most sensible of these birds have been looking forward to that day, with delightful an-Patent Medicines and Perfumery, ticipations, when they shall fulfill their appointed end; when they shall be wasted through a cloud of gastronomic orders into that heaven of theirs, where they shall strut
